ANTHROPOLOGY: CHILD OF IMPERIALISM

THIRD WORLD STUDY GROUP
ANTHROPOLOGY CHILD OF IMPERIALISM

by KATHLEEN GOUGH

This pamphlet is a reprint of an article entitled "Anthropology and Imperialism"* by Kathleen Gough, which appeared in the April 1968 issue of Monthly Review, "an independent Socialist magazine" published in the USA, (for further information as to Monthly Review see page 14). The pamphlet is also the first document to be published by the Third World Study Group, a student/staff society at the School of Oriental and African Studies, London.

The text presented here is exactly the same as that which appeared in Monthly Review, including the original footnotes. The references and bibliography are substantially the same, the only difference being that we have specified whether and by whom the books listed are published in Great Britain. We have also interrupted the text in six places and introduced "breathing-space" sub-headings, the wording of which has been taken from Kathleen Gough's text with her permission.

On behalf of the Third World Study Group, we are grateful to Kathleen Gough and to Monthly Review for the permission to reprint this article, and for the promptness with which they acceded to all our requests.

In reading this article, it will appear that many of the points and references relate to anthropologists in the USA and to their work. It is our conviction however that what Kathleen Gough has to say is not only universally relevant in all anthropological and sociological fields of study, but also in any place or discussion that claims to be concerned with the "Third World". This is why we have reprinted the article in this more easily available format.

There is no reason to assume that anthropologists and sociologists in this country, or indeed anywhere in the world, are not victims of the same pressures and traditions that Kathleen Gough describes. (Third World Study Group 1st October 1968)

* Although the title of the article is "Anthropology and Imperialism", "Anthropology: Child of Imperialism" was the title used on the cover of Monthly Review, and the one preferred for this pamphlet.
ANTHROPOLOGY AND IMPERIALISM by KATHLEEN GOUGH

This paper was first prepared for an audience of anthropologists in the United States of America, where I have taught and researched for the past twelve years. Some of the questions that it raises apply, although perhaps less acutely, to social and cultural anthropologists from the other industrial nations of Western Europe, North America, Australia and New Zealand. The international circumstances to which I refer no doubt also create problems for anthropologists born and resident in a number of the Latin American, Asian, and African countries where much anthropological research is carried out. I should be especially glad if this paper stimulates some among the latter anthropologists to comment on how these circumstances are viewed by them and how they affect their work.

Recently a number of anthropologists, and of students, have complained that cultural and social anthropology is failing to tackle significant problems of the modern world. As I have thought so for some time, I should like to make a tentative statement about where I think we stand today, and to follow it with some proposals. This being a new departure, I must ask to be excused if I am both obvious and argumentative.

IMPERIALIST FRAMEWORK

Anthropology is a child of Western imperialism. It has roots in the humanist visions of the Enlightenment, but as a university discipline and a modern science it came into its own in the last decades of the nineteenth and the early twentieth centuries. This was the period in which the Western nations were making their final push to bring practically the whole pre-industrial, non-Western world under their political and economic control.

Until the Second World War most of our fieldwork was carried out in societies that had been conquered by our own governments. We tended to accept the imperialist framework as given, perhaps partly because we were influenced by the dominant ideas of our time, and partly because at that time there was little anyone could do to dismantle the empires. In spite of some belief in value-free social science, anthropologists in those days seem to have commonly played roles characteristic of white liberals in other spheres of our society, sometimes of white liberal reformers. Anthropologists were of higher social status than their informants; they were usually of the dominant race, and they were protected by

* Notes at end of article on page 10

Kathleen Gough is teaching at Simon Fraser University, in British Columbia. An earlier version of this paper was presented at the Southwestern States Anthropological Association Meetings, in San Francisco, California, in March 1967. It was broadcast on KPFA radio and later published in "The Economist and Political Weekly", Bombay, Sept. 9, 1967. Extracts from it appear in another article, "World Revolution and Science of Man", in "The Dissenting Academy", edited by Theodore Roszak, Pantheon Books, 1967, pp. 135-158.
imperial law; yet, living closely with native peoples, they tended to take their part and to try to protect them against the worst forms of imperialist exploitation. Customary relations developed between the anthropologists and the government or the various private agencies who funded and protected them. Other types of customary relationships grew up between anthropologists and the people whose institutions they studied. Applied anthropology came into being as a kind of social work and community development effort for non-white peoples, whose future was seen in terms of gradual education, and of amelioration of conditions many of which had actually been imposed by their Western Conquerors in the first place.

THE "UNDERDEVELOPED" WORLD

Since the Second World War, a new situation has come about. There are today some 2,352 million people in underprivileged nations. About 773 million of them, or one third, have already, through revolution, passed out of the sphere of Western imperialism into the new socialist states of China, Mongolia, North Korea, North Vietnam, and Cuba. However arduous and conflictful their conditions, they are now beyond the domination of the capitalist powers and are off on tracks of their own. Because of the Cold War (and in the case of Vietnam, the hot war), American anthropologists are unable to study those societies directly, and have made few comparisons of their political economies or community structures with those of underdeveloped nations with capitalist or with "mixed" economies. When American studies of socialist societies are made, I would argue that the built-in assumption that "communism," especially revolutionary communism, is bad and unviable commonly produces distortions of both theory and fact. Granting the difficulties of obtaining reliable information, I believe that more objective studies could be made if greater attention were paid to the work of the few Western social scientists who have lived in these countries, for example, Owen Lattimore (1962), Joan Robinson (1958, 1964), Jan Myrdal (1965), and David and Isabel Crook (1959, 1966). In addition to primary sources from the socialist nations there are also, of course, the writings of Western journalists and other specialists who have lived or traveled in the socialist countries since their revolutions. Examples are René Dumont (1965, 1967), Stuart and Roma Gelder (1964), Felix Greene (1961, 1964, 1966), Edgar Snow (1962), William Hinton (1966), Han Suyin (1965, 1966, 1967), Anna Louise Strong (1962, 1964), Wilfred Burchett (1963, 1965, 1966), Charles Taylor (1966), and many others. Most of these writers are favorable to the newer socialisms, and most tend to be neglected or scoffed at in the United States. Yet American social scientists think nothing of using travelers' reports to eke out their knowledge of non-Western societies of the fifteenth to eighteenth centuries, biased or mission-oriented though some of them may have been. Certainly such studies are not discarded on the grounds that their authors happen to like the societies they visited. There is no reason why anthropologists cannot employ similar criteria of objectivity to modern writers who admire "china or other socialist countries today.

There remain about 1,579 million people, or 67 percent of the total, in non-Western nations with capitalist or with "mixed" economies. Of those, 49 million, or 2 percent of the total, are still in more or less classical colonial societies such as South Africa, Mozambique, or Angola, ruled by small white elites drawn from the "mother country" or else now severed from it as separate settler populations. About another 511 million, or 22 percent of the total, live in what may be regarded as satellite or client states. The largest of these states, with populations of over 5 million, are Colombia, Argentina, Peru, Brazil, Ecuador, Chile, Venezuela, the Philippines, South Vietnam, South Korea, Thailand, Taiwan, Malaysia, the Congo, Nigeria, Iran, Southern Arabia, Cameroon and Turkey. The list is very tentative, for modern neo-imperialism varies in intensity. Some might include Mexico and Pakistan, bringing the total to 657 million, or 28 percent of the underdeveloped world. In all of these client states there are indigenous governments, but these tend to be so constrained by Western military or economic aid and by private investments that they have little autonomy. Most of their governments are opposed to social reforms and would probably collapse if Western aid were withdrawn.
About 318 million of these people, or 14 percent of the total, live in nations belonged to the United States, either in Latin America - the traditional preserve of United States capital - or else in a fringe around China, where the United States has established satellite regimes in an effort to stave off the spread of revolutionary socialism. If we include Pakistan and Mexico, the United States client states amount to about 20 percent of the total.

The remaining 873 million, or 37 percent of the total, live in nations that are usually considered in the West to be relatively independent, under governments containing popular nationalist leaders. Most of these leaders conducted nationalist struggles against European colonialism a decade or two ago, and some fought wars of liberation. By contrast, the governments of most of the client states were either installed by, or arose after, military coups at least partly inspired from the West. Most of the independent "Third World" nations regard themselves as politically neutral, and as in some sense socialist or aspiring to become socialist.
Because the appeal of their governments is of a multi-class character, Peter Worsley (1964) calls them"populist" There is a public sector of the economy and an emphasis on national planning, as well as a large private sector dominated by foreign capital. The largest of these states, with populations over 5 million, are India, Burma, Cambodia, Ceylon, Indonesia, Afghanistan, Nepal, Syria, Iraq, Yemen, The United Arab Republic, Algeria, Morocco, Kenya, Tanzania, Sudan, Ethiopia, Uganda, and Ghana.

During the 1950's, many liberal social scientists and others hoped that these neutral nations would form a strong Third World that could act independently of either the Western industrial or the Communist powers. I suggest that in the 1960's this hope was dimmed, and is now almost extinguished, chiefly because of the expansion of American capital and military power, the refusal of European nations to relinquish their own economic strongholds, and the failure of many new governments to improve the living conditions of their people. In the past fifteen years, at least 227 million people in 16 nations, or 10 percent of the underdeveloped world, have, after a longer or shorter period of relative independence, moved into or moved back into, a client relationship, usually with the United States. These nations are Guatemala, Honduras, the Dominican Republic, Guyana, Venezuela, Brazil, Argentina, Bolivia, Ecuador, Trinidad and Tobago, South Vietnam, Thailand, Laos, the Congo, Togo and Gabon. In most of these countries the shift in orientation followed a military coup. A further 674 million in India, Indonesia, Afghanistan, Ceylon, Kenya, and Ghana, which I have classified as "independent" have recently moved into much closer dependence on the United States, so that their future as independent nations is now uncertain. Together with the United States' client states and colonial dependencies, this brings to 1.14 billions, or 48 percent, the total whose policies are very heavily swayed by the United States of America.
We must also remember that United States capital and military power now exert a strong influence on the colonies and client states of European powers (11 percent of the total), as well as on most of the remaining 8 percent of "neutral" states. In these circumstances, United States power can truly be said to be entrenched with more or less firmness throughout the underdeveloped world outside of the socialist states.

Countering this re-imposition of Western power, armed revolutionary movements now exist in at least 20 countries with a total population of 266 million. These countries are Guatemala, Peru, Venezuela, Ecuador, Paraguay, Brazil, Honduras, Bolivia, Colombia, Angola, Mozambique, the Congo, Cameroon, Portuguese Guinea, Yemen, Southern Arabia, the Philippines, Thailand, Laos and South Vietnam. About 507 million people live in seven other countries where armed revolutionary movements or parties have considerable support, namely India, Rhodesia, Southwest Africa, South Africa, Nicaragua, the Dominican Republic, and Panama. In more than one third of the underdeveloped world, therefore, socialist revolution against both native elites and Western dominance is a considered possibility, while in another third it has already been accomplished. Even in the remaining relatively stable colonial, client, or neutral states, a majority of the people is getting poorer, and a small minority of rich is getting richer. Populations are increasing, discontent is widespread, and revolutionary struggles are quite possible within a decade or two.

Whereas in the Fifties, it looked to some of us as though much of the non-Western world might gain genuine political and economic independence from the West by peaceful means, this is no longer the case. Western dominance is continuing under new guises, even expanding and hardening. At the same time, revolution now begins to appear as the route by which underdeveloped societies may hope to gain freedom from Western controls.

THE END OF ANTHROPOLOGY?

In this revolutionary and proto-revolutionary world, anthropologists are beginning to be in difficulties. We are rapidly losing our customary relationships as white liberals between the conquerors and the colonised. From the beginning, we have inhabited a triple environment involving obligations, first to the peoples we studied, second to our colleagues and our science, and third, to the powers who employed us in universities or who funded our research. In many cases we seem now to be in danger of being torn apart by the conflicts between the first and third set of obligations, while the second set of loyalties, to our subject as an objective and humane endeavour, is being severely tested and jeopardized. On the one hand, part of the non-Western world is in revolt, especially against the American government as the strongest and most counterrevolutionary of the Western powers. The war in Vietnam has, of course, exacerbated the non-Western sense of outrage, although the actual governments of most of these nations are so dependent on the United States that they soften their criticisms. On the other hand, anthropologists are becoming increasingly subject to restrictions, unethical temptations and political controls from the United States government and its subordinate agencies, as Professor Ralph Beals' report on Problems of Anthropological Research and Ethics amply shows. The question tends to become: what does an ent anthropologist do who is dependent on a counterrevolutionary government, in an increasingly revolutionary world? To complicate matters, into the arena has stepped a fourth and most vociferous public, namely students, who once imbibed knowledge peaceably, but who are now, because of their own crises, asking awkward questions about ethics, commitments, and goals.

There is little wonder that with all these demands many anthropologists bury themselves in their specialties or, if they must go abroad, seek out the remotest least unstable tribe or village they can find.

As Peter Worsley has recently pointed out, however, in a paper called "The End of Anthropology?" we shall eventually have to choose either to remain, or become, specialists who confine themselves to the cultures of small-scale, pre-industrial societies, or else, bringing to bear all our knowledge of cultural evolution and of primitive social institutions, embark fully on the study of modern societies, including modern revolutions. If we take the former path, as our subject matter disappears, we shall become historians, and will retreat from the substantial work we have already done in contemporary societies. If we take the latter path, which is the one some of us must inevitably follow, we shall have to admit that our subject matter is increasingly the same as that of political scientists, economists, and sociologists. The only way that we can not admit this is by confining ourselves to small segments of modern society. But as the scale of these societies widens, such studies are less and less justifiable theoretically or methodologically except within a framework of understanding of what is happening to the larger system. Anthropologists have, moreover, some right to demand of themselves that they do study the larger system as a totality, for they have fifty years of experience of analysing the interconnectedness of political, economic and religious institutions within small-scale systems. While they must necessarily depend for much of their data on the other social sciences, anthropologists do have some historical claim to play a synthesizing role.

WE HAVE ...... FAILED

Unfortunately we have, I think, a serious drawback in our own history which makes it very difficult for us to approach modern society as a single, interdependent, world social system; that is, although we have worked for over a hundred years in conquered societies, and although for at least fifty of them we have emphasized the interconnectedness of parts of social systems, we have virtually failed to study Western imperialism as a social system, or even adequately to explore the effects of imperialism on the societies we studied. Of late a few pioneer works have appeared which attempt this task, notably Worsley's own book, "The Third World". Wallerstein's collection, "Social Change: the Colonial Situation", draws together useful extracts by social scientists and nationalist leaders over the past twenty years. Wolf's study of Mexico (1959), Steward's and others' of Puerto Rico (1956), Epstein's of politics in the Zambian copper-belt (1958), and a number of others also move in this general direction. But it is remarkable how few anthropologists have studied imperialism, especially its economic system.
It is true, of course, that anthropologists have made numerous studies of modern social change in pre-industrial societies, especially in local communities. They have, however, usually handled them through very general concepts: "culture-contact", "acculturation", "social change", "modernization", "urbanization", "Westernization", or "the folk-urban continuum". Force, suffering, and exploitation tend to disappear in these accounts of structural processes, and the units of study are usually so small that it is hard to see the forest for the trees. These approaches, in the main, have produced factual accounts and limited hypotheses about the impact of industrial cultures on pre-industrial ones in local communities, but have done little to aid understanding of the world distribution of power under imperialism or of its total system of economic relationships. Until recently there has also been, of course, a bias in the types of non-Western social units chosen for study with primitive communities least touched by modern changes being preferred over the ones, cash-crop plantations, white settlements, bureaucracies, urban concentrations, and nationalist movements that have played such prominent roles in colonial societies.

Why have anthropologists not studied world imperialism as a unitary phenomenon? To begin to answer this question would take another article. I will merely suggest some possible lines of enquiry, namely: (1) the very process of specialization within anthropology and between anthropology and the related disciplines, especially political science, sociology and economics; (2) the tradition of individual field work in small-scale societies, which at first produced a rich harvest of ethnography but later placed constraints on our methods and theories; (3) unwillingness to offend the governments that funded us, by choosing controversial subjects; and (4) the bureaucratic, counterrevolutionary setting in which anthropologists have increasingly worked in their universities, which may have contributed to a sense of impotence and to the development of machine-like models.

It may be objected that I have ignored the large volume of post-war American writing in applied anthropology and in economic and political anthropology concerned with development. This work certainly exists, and some of it is fruitful. I would argue, however, that much of it springs from erroneous or doubtful assumptions and theories that are being increasingly challenged by social scientists in the new nations themselves. Among these assumptions are: the explanation of economic backwardness in terms of values and psychological characteristics of the native population; the assumption that it is desirable to avoid rapid, disruptive changes; the refusal to take value positions that oppose official policies; the insistence on multiple causation; the assumption that the local community is a suitable unit for development programmes; the belief that the main process by which development occurs is diffusion from an industrial center; and the refusal to contemplate the possibility that for some societies revolution may be the only practicable means towards economic advance. In general, applied and economic anthropology stemming from North America has assumed an international capitalist economy in its framework. The harsh fact seems to be, however, that in most countries of the underdeveloped world where private enterprise predominates, the living conditions of the majority are deteriorating, and "take-off" is not occurring. If this is true it will not be surprising if the intellectuals of these countries reject the metropolitan nations' applied social science and seek remedies elsewhere.
There are of course already a large number of studies, indeed a whole literature, on Western imperialism, most although not all by writers influenced by Marx. In addition to the classic treatments by J.A. Hobson (1954), Lenin (1939), and Rosa Luxemburg (1951), Parker T. Moon (1925), Mary E. Townsend (1940), Eric Williams (1944), Fritz Sternberg (1951), the anthropologist Ramakrishna Mukherjee (1958), and Paul A. Baran (1957) have provided outstanding examples of such work. More recent studies include, of course, Baran and Sweezy's "Monopoly Capital", Nkrumah's "Neo-Colonialism, the Last Stage of Imperialism", René Dumont's "Lands Alive" and "False Start in Africa", Fanon's "Wretched of the Earth", and "Studies in a Dying Colonialism", and A.G. Frank's "Capitalism and Underdevelopment in Latin America". Such books tend in America to be either ignored or reviewed cursorily and then dismissed. They rarely appear in standard anthropological bibliographies. I can only say that this American rejection of Marxist and other "rebels" literature, especially since the McCarthy period, strikes me as tragic. The refusal to take seriously and to defend as intellectually respectable the theories and challenges of these writers has to a considerable extent deadened controversy in our subject, as well as ruining the careers of particular individuals. It is heartening that in recent years the publications of Monthly Review Press, International Publishers, "Studies on the Left", and other left-wing journals have become a kind of underground literature for many graduate students and younger faculty in the social sciences. But both orthodox social science and those Marxist-influenced studies suffer from the lack of open confrontation and argument between their proponents. There are of course political reasons for this state of affairs, stemming from our dependence on the powers, but it is unfortunate that we have allowed ourselves to become so subservient, to the detriment of our right of free enquiry and free speculation.

A WORK OF SYNTHESIS

I should like to suggest that some anthropologists who are interested in these matters could begin a work of synthesis by focusing on some of the contradictions between the assertions and theories of these non-American or un-American writers and those of orthodox American social scientists, and choosing research problems that would throw light on these contradictions. Among such problems might be the following:

1. Is it true, as A.G. Frank (1967c) argues from United Nations figures, that per capita food production in non-Communist Asia, Africa and Latin America has declined in many cases to below pre-war levels, since 1960, whereas it has risen above pre-war levels in China and Cuba? Or is it generally true, as the American press asserts and many social scientists assume, that capitalist agricultural production in underdeveloped countries is poor, but socialist production is even poorer.
2. A set of research problems might be developed around comparisons of the structure and efficiency of socialist and capitalist foreign aid. One might, for example, compare the scope and results of American economic and military aid to the Dominican Republic with those of Russian aid to Cuba. Although Americans cannot go freely to Cuba, it is conceivable that a European and an American, coordinating their research problems, might do such comparative work. In countries such as India, the UAR, or Algeria, comparable socialist and capitalist aid projects might be studied within the same locality.

3. We need comparative studies of types of modern intersocietal political and economic dominance, to define and refine such concepts as imperialism, neocolonialism, etc. How, for example, does Russian power over one or another of the East European countries compare with that of the United States over certain Latin American or Southeast Asian countries with respect to such variables as military subjection, the disposal of the subordinate society's economic surplus, and the relations between political elites? How does Chinese control over Tibet compare, historically, structurally, and functionally, with Indian control over Kashmir, Hyderabad, or the Naga Hills, and what have been the effects of these controls on the class structures, economic productivity, and local political institutions of these regions?

4. Comparative studies of revolutionary and proto-revolutionary movements are clearly desirable if we are to keep abreast with indigenous movements for social change. In spite of obvious difficulties, it is possible to study some revolutions after they have occurred, or to study revolts in their early stages or after they have been suppressed. There are, moreover, Westerners who live and travel with revolutionary movements; why are anthropologists seldom or never among them? We need to know, for example, whether there is a common set of circumstances under which left-wing and nationalist revolutions have occurred or have been attempted in recent years in Cuba, Algeria, Indo-China, Malaysia, the Philippines, Indonesia, Kenya, and Zanzibar. Are there any recognizable shifts in ideology or organization between these earlier revolts and the guerrilla movements now taking shape in Guatemala, Venezuela, Columbia, Angola, Mozambique, Laos, Thailand, Cameroon, Yemen, or Southern Arabia? What are the types of peasantry and urban workers most likely to be involved in these revolutions; are these typologies of leadership and organization? Why have some failed and others succeeded? How did it happen, for example, that some 1,000,000 communists and their families and supporters were killed in 1966 in Indonesia with almost no indigenous resistance, and how does this affect the self-assessment and prospects of, say, the Left Communist Party in India?

I may be accused of asking for Project Camelot, but I am not. I am asking that we should do these studies in our way, as we would study a cargo-cult or "kula"-ring, without the built-in biases of tainted financing, without the assumptions that counterrevolution, and not revolution, is the best answer, and with the ultimate economic and spiritual welfare of our informants, and of the international community, before us rather than the short-run military or industrial profits of the Western nations. I would also ask that these studies be attempted by individuals or self-selected teams, rather than as part of the grand artifice of some externally stimulated master-plan. Perhaps what I am asking is not possible any more in America, I am concerned that it may not be, that Americans are already too compromised, too constrained by their own imperial government. If that is so, the question really is how anthropologists can get back their freedom of enquiry and of action, and I suggest that, individually and collectively, we should place this first on the list.

NOTES

1. My husband, David F. Aberle, and I left the United States in 1967 to live and work in Canada. We did so partly because of the general problems to which I refer in this paper. More immediately, we were unwilling to allow the academic grades that we gave our male students in their university classes to be used by draft boards, under the Selective Service system, as a criterion of whether or not they should be conscripted for military service in Vietnam. I mention this as an instance, relevant to the subject of this paper, of ways in which the proper goals of intellectual work have been undermined by current nationalist and military policies.

2. I use the term "underdeveloped" to refer to societies which have, or have recently had, particular features of economic structure produced as a result of several decades or centuries or overt or covert domination by Western industrial capitalist nations. I have included in this category all the nations and the remaining colonies of Latin America, Africa, and Asia, with the exception of Japan. These and later figures are derived from the United Nations totals of 1961, as provided in the "World Almanac" of 1967. For some of the more general characteristics of underdeveloped economies see Gunnar Myrdal (1956), especially Chapters XI, XII, and XIII; Paul A. Baran (1957); and A.G. Frank (1966, 1967a).

3. There are, of course, notable exceptions to this statement, among them, for example, Franz Schurmann (1966).

5. For these and other criticisms, see Guillermo Bonfil Batalla (1966), P. Chikwe Onwuachi and Alvin W. Wolfe (1966), Rodolfo Stavenhagen (1966-67), and A.G. Frank (1967b).

6. For a rare example of such a study, see Donald L. Barnett and Karari Njama (1966).
REFERENCES AND BIBLIOGRAPHY

(This bibliography was originally compiled for use in the U.S.A. We have left it intact, including the U.S.A. dates of publication. However, we have wherever possible indicated, inside the brackets, whether and by whom the works are published in the U.K. Abbreviations: HC = hard cover. PBK = paper back.)

PAUL A. BARAN

PAUL A. BARAN and PAUL M. SWEENEY

DONALD L. BARNETT and KARARI NJAMA

GUILLERMO BONFIL BATALLA

WILFRED BURCHETT
1963 "The Furtive War" International Publishers
1966 "Vietnam North" International Publishers

DAVID & ISABEL CROOK
1966 "The First Years of Yangyi Commune" Routledge and K.P.

RENE DUMONT
1967 "Isise-Start ln'Afrique" Grove Press

EPSTEIN

FRANZ FANON
1963 "The Wretched of the Earth" Grove Press

ANDRE GUNDER FRANK
1967c "Hunger" in "Canadian Dimension"

STUART & ROMA GELDER
FELIX GREENE
1961 "China" Doubleday
1964 "A Curtain of Ignorance" Doubleday

WILLIAM HINTON

J.A. HOBSON
1954 "Imperialism: A Study" Allan & Unwin, 5th Impression (Allen & Unwin HC)

OWEN LATTIMORE

V.I. LENIN
1939 "Imperialism, the Highest Stage of Capitalism" International Publishers N.Y. (Central Books HC & PBK)

ROSA LUXEBURG:

PARKER T. MOON
1925 "Imperialism & World Politics" Macmillan (Collier-Macmillan HC)

RAMAKRISHNA MUKHERJEE
1958 "The Rise and Fall of the East India Company" VEB Deutscher Vorlag der Wissenschaft, Berlin (Luzac HC)

GUNNAR MYRDAL

JAN MYRDAL
1965 "Report from a Chinese Village" Pantheon Books (Penguin PBK)

KWAME NKRUMAH
1966 "Neo-Colonialism, the Last Stage of Imperialism" International Publishers NY (Nelson HC)

P. CHIKE ONUUCHI & ALVIN H. WOLFE

JOAN ROBINSON & SOLOMON ADLER
1958 "China: An Economic Perspective" Fabian International Bureau

JOAN ROBINSON
1964 "Notes From China" O.U.P. Reprinted by M.R. Press 1964 for USA

FRANZ SCHURMANN
1966 "Ideology and Organisation in Communist China" Univ. of Calif. Press (Cambridge U.P. HC)

EDGAR SNOW
1962 "The Other Side of the River" Random House (Gollancz HC)

RODOLFO STAVENHAGEN
FRITZ STERNBERG
1951  "Capitalism and Socialism on Trial" J. Day N.Y.

ANNA L. STRONG
1962  "Cash and Violence in Laos and Vietnam. Mainstream"

1964  "The Rise of the Chinese People's Communes - and Six Years After."
       New World Press, Peking

JULIAN H. STEWART
1959  "The People of Puerto Rico" Univ. of Illinois

HAN SUYIN
1966  "The Crippled Tree" Jonathan Cape, London

CHARLES TAYLOR
1966  "Report from Red China" Random House

MARY E. TOWNSEND
1940  "European Colonial Expansion Since 1871" J.P. Lippincott

IMMANUEL WALLERSTEIN
1966  "Social Change: The Colonial Situation" John Wiley and Sons

ERIC WILLIAMS
1944  "Capitalism and Slavery" Univ. of N. Carolina Press

ERIC R. WOLF
1959  "Sons of the Shaking Earth" Univ. of Chicago Press

THE WORLD ALMANAC
1966  Newspaper Enterprise Association, Inc.

PETER WORSLEY
1964  "The Third World" Univ. of Chicago Press
       "The End of Anthropology?" Paper prepared for the Sociology and Anthropology Working Group of the 6th World Congress of Sociology, available from Professor Peter Worsley, Department of Sociology, University of Manchester.

(Central Books HC)

(Illinois Univ. P./ Book Centre HC)

(J. Cape HC)

(J. Cape HC)

(Gollancz HC)

(A. Deutsch HC & PBK)

(Univ Chic. P/Phoenix Books PBK)

(Weidenfeld & Nicholson HC & PBK)
MONTHLY REVIEW - An independent socialist magazine

Published in New York, this monthly magazine has been appearing regularly for twenty years, providing in its editorials and articles a reasoned analysis in depth of the American economy and foreign policy.

The magazine is also considered to be one of the most authoritative sources on developments in Latin America: recent articles have described the guerrilla movements in Guatemala, Columbia and Peru. A Spanish-language edition equals the English-language circulation and is on sale all over the Latin American continent.

This past year, an Italian-language edition has been published each month in Rome and reports growing circulation and attention.

Monthly Review is edited by Leo Huberman and Paul M. Sweezy. Huberman was formerly chairman of the Department of Social Science at New College, Colombia University, and Sweezy taught at Harvard University for more than ten years. Both Huberman and Sweezy enjoy a wide reputation for their many works on economic and political affairs. In 1966 they were awarded the City of Omegna Literary Prize for their book "The Theory of United States Foreign Policy".

In 1966 an office was established in London and subscriptions can be obtained and paid for in British currency. An annual subscription costs £3 and, starting with the October 1968 issue, copies will be sent to the U.K. by air freight, thus getting copies to subscribers only days after publication in New York. Persons wishing to take out a subscription should forward their cheque to the Monthly Review address below.

Monthly Review Press published books of history, economics, politics and world affairs. These can be obtained from the London office of Monthly Review (address below). Many of the books are cited in Kathleen Gough's article. Other recent titles include:
"The Pillage of the Third World" by Perre Jalée.
"Fifty Years of Soviet Power" edited by Leo Huberman and Paul M. Sweezy.
"The Economic Transformation of Cuba" by Edward Boorstein.
"Aden Arabie" by Paul Nizan, intro. by Jean-Paul Sartre.

The THIRD WORLD STUDY GROUP is a society of the School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS), London University, Malet Street, London, WC1. The Group was formed in November 1967 to promote awareness and discussion of the cultural, social and political aspects of the areas known as the "Third World". By regular open meetings, discussions and films, the Group contributes to a politicization of SOAS and its members. Further information available from SOAS.